DESCRIPTION

Bias impacts everything. From the decisions we make, to the way we respond in certain situations, to how we see and treat others, our myriad of biases are often at the helm, even at work. And the scariest part is many of us have no idea.

Each and every one of us has bias. If you have a brain, you have bias. And that bias, if unmanaged, presents opportunity for us to do true harm to those around us, ourselves, and our organizations. It can create non-inclusive, even hostile work environments that yield decreased team performance, turnover, and less than desired business results.

In this interactive and thought-provoking program, Raven introduces attendees to their own personal biases, provides context for their potential sources, and reveals their true potential impact. She helps attendees begin to effectively “rumble” with bias through four proven strategies to aid in awareness and combating bias.

OBJECTIVES

- Explain the connection between generations and racial equity
- Demonstrate how and why one's generation can impact how they view racism today
- Examine why equity is what marginalized groups and their allies want and need
- Describe how to leverage generational differences to move towards racial equity

AUDIENCE

Employees and/or leaders of all backgrounds
